Just when arrivals started peaking, the yard was closed since March 22 due to the outbreak of novel coronavirus. The gains in soybean can be seen due to lower supply following a lean season in local markets. U.S. soybean futures were up 1% for the week, the biggest weekly gain in a month. Planting progress is further behind than the trade thought and the weather going forward is a bit concerning. After heavy precipitation across the Midwest in recent days, more rain is expected in parts of the region over the coming week, according to meteorologists. Soybeans also drew some support from news that soybean exports at a berth in Brazil's large Paranagua port were temporarily halted after a ship crew member tested positive for the coronavirus. Mustard futures (June) is witnessing a bull run, and this uptrend is likely to continue till 4600-4650. The supply is lower than expected supply of fresh crop in spot markets due to restrictions to curb the spread of coronavirus in the country. Farmers in Rajasthan and parts of Punjab have started raising alarm over the locust attack that has started ravaging their recently-sowed cotton crop. The locusts have nearly destroyed the fresh vegetation of the cotton plants. The situation is bad in northern and western Rajasthan. In the international market, ICE cotton futures fell more than 1% on Thursday amid concerns that a further escalation in U.S.-China tensions could hurt Chinese demand for the natural fiber. China's parliament decided to go forward with national security legislation for Hong Kong that Western countries fear could erode its freedoms.
