ANALYSIS

In its latest move, the Federal Reserve has raised its benchmark interest rate by a quarter of a percentage point, marking its tenth consecutive increase since early 2022. While this action was widely expected, market participants have been bracing for several cuts by the end of the year as the Fed seeks to address the complex challenges of inflation and fallout in the financial sector.

Notably, the Fed's latest statement removed previous guidance that had suggested additional monetary tightening may be necessary, and Chair Jerome Powell emphasized that any future rate changes would be heavily dependent on economic developments. Although the central bank remains optimistic that inflation will eventually return to its target, Powell acknowledged that this process may take longer than expected.

On the FX side, we are not so bearish in the US dollar against Rupee and USDINR may stay in a range between 81.50 to 82.35 in coming days while eurUSD and gbpUSD likely to retreat from its latest high to fall towards 1.08 and 1.23 respectively in coming days while EURINR and GBPINR look stretch at the higher levels. It's over to European Central Bank later today to decide its stance and further assessment of FX valuation.
