MACRO ANALYSIS

Indian rupee gradually sliding lower as some modest rebound in the dollar surfaces since last two trading sessions. Additionally month end oil imports settlement is the key for USDINR to trade higher. On global front US fiscal stimulus announcement is still in deadlock and further dollar move will be guided after the announcement. We think USDINR will remain higher for the day with a tentative range of 73.60 - 73.82.

The euro is weaker since yesterday after 3 consecutive days of gains against dollar and rupee as well. We think its a broad dollar move that holding the higher level in euro pairs. Admittedly the European economy continues to struggle to lift the growth to pre-pandemic levels. Going forward next week ECB policy meet will be crucial for getting a standalone direction in euro. For the day we think euro will remain range bound unless any major flashes of US fiscal stimulus deal hit the market.

The pound is slightly lower after surging in this week on hopes of a new UK/EU trade agreement. Meanwhile Bank of England member confirmed that the central bank is not ruling out negative interest rates in the future. We think the Brexit headlines will continue to direct the move in coming days and based on the latest development on Brexit front, it is advisable to traders and hedgers to avoid selling pound at current levels.
