MACRO ANALYSIS

The dollar was on the defensive on Thursday as downbeat U.S. economic data and optimism about corona virus vaccines prompted investors to seek out riskier assets tied to global commodities and emerging markets. The dollar's fall has been so rapid that it could rebound in the short term, but some investors still expect a decline over the longer term as they shift positions in anticipation that the corona virus outbreak will wane next year.

The British pound traded near a more than two-month high against the dollar as investor's awaited details on trade talks between Britain and the European Union this week. Investors have rushed to riskier currencies and emerging market assets in recent weeks after positive data on COVID-19 vaccine efficacy and signs of stability in U.S. politics, which has weighed broadly on the dollar.

Sentiment for the greenback took a hit after data on Wednesday showed weekly U.S. jobless claims rose more than expected and personal incomes fell. The dollar index against a basket of six other currencies was near the lowest in more than two months. In Asia, trading in the dollar is likely to be subdued because U.S. financial markets are closed later on Thursday for the Thanksgiving holiday.
